

★ THE TEXAS TRIBUNE

CONTRIBUTE ★ TODAY ★

ENVIRONMENT WATER SUPPLY

Business Groups Back Texas Water Ballot Measure

by Kate Galbraith | 9 hours ago | 4 Comments

Print Republish Share Comment Email Tweet Recommend

KEYWORDS: Texas Association of Business, Texas Public Policy Foundation (TPPF), Texas Water Development Board, drought, Groundwater, Water

Enlarge

photo by : Robert W. Hart

A pump house at Lake J.B. Thomas sits high and dry with almost no water remaining to pump. The lake level is at 4.60 percent.

To meet the needs of its growing population, drought-stricken Texas urgently needs more water infrastructure totaling $231 billion to augment water supplies and treatment, wastewater processing and flood control by 2060, according to a draft of the state water plan that was released last month.

Next month, Texans will go to the polls to decide whether to help the state get part of the way there. If Proposition 2 on the ballot passes, the Texas Water Development Board, the state's water-planning agency, will be authorized to lend $6 billion via a bond fund dedicated to building and fixing water infrastructure.

Many of the state's business heavyweights have lined up behind the proposition, as have some environmental groups.

"Without adequate funding to implement water strategies and build necessary infrastructure, Texas could face a water shortage in coming decades that would be devastating to our state economy," said Debbie Hastings, vice president of environmental affairs for the Texas Oil and Gas Association, which supports the proposition, in a statement.

The Texas Association of Business also backs the proposition, as do the Texas Association of Realtors and the Texas Association of Builders.

"Our position is that Proposition 2 will save businesses money, not cost businesses money," said Steve Minick, vice president of government affairs for the Texas Association of Business, which is beginning an educational campaign to encourage support for the proposition.

The idea behind the bond fund is that the TWDB can borrow at extremely low rates because of the state's good credit, and use that borrowed money to make loans to far smaller groups like local water utilities, which will pay the loans back with interest. (The local groups will find funding from the water and wastewater rates of residents and businesses.) The sole cost to the state, says the TWDB, will be the cost of the election, due to the "self supporting" nature of the ballot measure.

"There's a lot of entities — especially in this economy, they can't access the market easily, and definitely less effectively than we can," said Melanie Callahan, the TWDB's interim executive administrator. The state's draft water plan identifies $53 billion in new water-supply needs by 2060, part of an overall need of $231 billion for all water infrastructure by that year.

The conservative Texas Public Policy Foundation opposes the measure.

"The water bonds provide a beneficial purpose, and I have no problem at all with authorizing more bonds as they're needed," said Talmadge Heflin, director of the Center for Fiscal Policy at the Texas Public Policy Foundation.

Sign up for Texas Tribune alerts

Get daily coverage delivered to your inbox

Enter Your Email

SUBMIT

Recommend

Be the first of your friends to recommend this.

The Tribune thanks our Supporting Sponsors

AustinVentures

NEW ON THE TRIB

Multimedia: Parsing Perry's Past on Race

by Emily Ramshaw, Ryan Murphy and Jay Root
October 5, 2011

2011 Texas Tribune Festival Keynote: Thomas A. Shannon, Jr.

by Todd Wiseman
October 5, 2011

In Need of Good News, Perry Releases Fundraising Totals

by Emily Ramshaw
October 5, 2011 (5)

The Brief: Top Texas News for Oct. 5, 2011

by David Muto
October 5, 2011 (9)

Shared

Viewed

Commented

However, he said that the group was concerned about an "evergreen" provision in the measure that means that the TWDB can always have up to $6 billion loaned out, as opposed to a $6 billion all-time cap. In other words, over time, the TWDB could end up lending significantly more than $6 billion, without needing additional authorization.

"The appropriate thing to do is not take the voters out of the loop," said Heflin, adding that this is the first time an "evergreen" provision has been included in TWDB bonding authority.

But Mike Barnett, an official with the Texas Association of Realtors, said that he welcomed the evergreen provision. "I think that's a benefit of it, actually, in that it provides a stable source of future funds for these projects," Barnett said.

Since its creation in 1957, the TWDB has authorized a little over $4 billion in bonding authority and issued about $3.3 billion in bonds, according to Callahan of the TPWD. Of that $3.3 billion, $1 billion has been issued in the last three years, she said, so "we have seen quite an uptick," she said.

If the measure does not pass, there are other funding sources available, but in limited amounts. "Without the funds provided through Proposition 2, most local entities will not be able to get financing for water-related infrastructure," the TWDB says.

Minick, of the Texas Association of Business, said that in TWDB's 50-plus years of running a bond program, "no entity in Texas has ever defaulted on a loan."

Nonetheless, the fact that the ballot measure comes at a time when the national conversation revolves around paying down debt, rather than accruing more, worries its backers. And indeed some Tea Party groups are starting to weigh in with concerns.

"I do know we need to reserve water supplies and do that type of work, but there is some question as to whether this level of bonded indebtedness is a good idea," said Mike Openshaw, co-founder of the North Texas Tea Party, who said that he was "still doing some investigational work" on the issue.

Said Minick at the Texas Association of Business: "We're all concerned about increasing debt of any government of any level, but let's not confuse this with the angst over recent federal debt issues." He added: "Rather than having a knee-jerk reaction of fear, we need to look at fact that Texas, as opposed to the federal government and some other states, has done such a good job at protecting its credit rating."

The beneficiaries of the proposition are customers of water utilities, including small businesses, according to Minick. If the measure doesn't pass, he said, "you will end up paying more to get the same thing, or paying the same thing to get less."

The Environmental Defense Fund supports the measure, said Amy Hardberger, a staff attorney.

"The program that this will be re-funding has been very beneficial to cities, especially smaller cities who may not have the money to do infrastructure," she said. She added that she had slight concerns that "you don't know where the money is going," but that talking with TWDB staff had largely alleviated that. There is no list of entities slated to receive loans; the local groups apply to the TWDB, which grants the loans on a case by case basis.

Hardberger said it seemed unlikely that the money would be used to build reservoirs, which can cost billions and are likely to require additional money from the legislature. She generally opposes reservoirs as "sort of a 1950s approach to a new millennium problem," whereas fixing leaky water pipes would be an example of a more wiser use of the TWDB fund, she said.

The Tribune thanks our Supporting Sponsors

Print

Republish

Share

Comment

Email

Tweet

Recommend

RELATED CONTENT

Draft Water Plan Says Texas "Will Not Have Enough"

by Kate Galbraith

September 27, 2011 (13)

Drought Scrambles Texas Water Utilities' Finances

RELATED TOPICS

Water Supply

Texas Association of Business

Texas Public Policy Foundation

Draft Water Plan: Texas "Will Not Have Enough", by Kate Galbraith Casie Kaluza Wenmohs and 251 others recommend this.

Updated: TDCJ Will End Final Feasts Before Executions, by Brandi Grissom David Guenther and 197 others recommend this.

Obama Defends Jobs Plan in Mesquite, Calls Out GOP, by Thanh Tan 128 people recommend this.

PRESENTED BY:
FROST

by Kate Galbraith
August 30, 2011 (6)

Back To Top

WE THANK OUR SPONSORS

CLINICAL LEADERS
IN THE TREATMENT OF HEART RHYTHM DISORDERS

TEXAS CARDIAC ARRHYTHMIA INSTITUTE
St. David's Medical Center

Learn More
tcainstitute.com

WRITERS

Becca Aaronson
Julian Aguilar
Justin Dehn
Kate Galbraith
Brandi Grissom
Reeve Hamilton
Mark Miller
Ryan Murphy
David Muto
Ben Philpott
Ross Ramsey
Emily Ramshaw
Jay Root
Evan Smith
Morgan Smith
Thanh Tan

TOPICS

2011 Budget Shortfall
Rainy Day Fund
Texas-Mexico Border
82nd Session Transcripts
Tom DeLay
Wind Energy
Texas Government Payroll
Immigration
2011 House Speaker's Race
Texas Legislature

Texas Ethics Commission
Higher Education
Environmental Problems and Pol..
Redistricting
Texas Department of Transporta..
Death Penalty
Voter ID
Social Studies Standards Debat...

TT SOCIAL MEDIA

Facebook
Twitter
YouTube
Vimeo

© 2011 The Texas Tribune

Terms of Service
Privacy Policy
About Us
Contact Us
Feeds
Mobile

Donate