Testimony Before the Texas House Corrections Committee on HB3702
April 2, 2007, 10:00 A.M., E2.016

Background

- In 1995, the Legislature abolished mandatory supervision (MS), which since 1977 had automatically released inmates after their calendar time served and good time equaled the sentence. It was replaced with discretionary mandatory supervision (DMS).
- The total DMS rate has declined from 60.02 percent in 2001 to 52.35 percent in 2005. The DMS approval rate in 2005 for nonviolent offenders was only 58.19 percent, meaning that 6,274 were approved out of 10,781.¹
- The Sunset Commission report noted that in 2003 and 2004, TBPP released more high-risk, high offense severity offenders with the lowest three scores than would have been released under the maximum guideline rate.² The Sunset Commission report on TDCJ recommended that more low-risk offenders be placed on mandatory supervision and found that “TDCJ does not use its statutory authority” to accomplish this.³

What HB3702 Does and Doesn't Do

- This legislation would restore mandatory supervision (MS) solely for nonviolent third degree drug possession felony offenders under Sections 481.115, 481.1151, 481.116, 481.117, 481.118, 481.121, or 481.129(c)(2) of the Health and Safety Code. A third degree felony is between one and four grams of cocaine, heroin, or methamphetamine.
- The bill would not affect offenders convicted of drug delivery (dealing) nor would it affect third degree property offenders. Additionally, inmates incarcerated for drug possession who previously committed a 3(g) offense, such as murder, rape, aggravated robbery, aggravated kidnapping, etc., would be ineligible for MS just as they are currently ineligible for DMS.

HB3702 Will Improve Offender Outcomes, Allow Focus on Violent & Sex Offenders

- Long prison sentences to address the problem of substance abuse are tantamount to throwing coins in the ocean. Nationally, half of all high school students have tried illegal drugs. Someone who has already served several years in prison for drug possession is unlikely to benefit from several more years, especially since only 15 percent of Texas prisoners who need drug treatment receive it in prison.
- Texas prisoners owe $2.5 billion in child support. By placing nonviolent low-level drug possession offenders on mandatory supervision earlier, they will have a longer time to benefit from parole services, such as treatment and job placement so that they can become productive members of society and meet the obligations to their children.
- This legislation would dovetail well with the thousands of new treatment and intermediate sanctions beds that are funded in the current appropriations bills in both chambers (some 6,100 in the Senate), as the drug possession offenders paroled as a result of this bill could be managed using these resources to effectively protect public safety and ensure that they are drug-free, productive citizens.

HB3702 Will Relieve Prison Crowding Crisis, Save Taxpayers Hundreds of Millions

- This bill will result in the earlier release of 527 drug possession offenders per year, according to the fiscal note. That would translate into $9.7 million in incarceration savings for the 2008-09 biennium and $569,000 in additional parole costs. Accordingly, estimated net operational savings in 2008-09 biennium would be $9.1 million. Savings in the 2010-11 biennium would be $11.5 million.
- Freeing up 527 beds per year would ameliorate the purported need to build more prisons. Specifically, TDCJ requested $420 million to construct 4,000 new prison beds. Based on this figure, this legislation would avoid $55 million in new prison construction costs, plus millions more over the next decade to operate such new prisons.

HB3702 Will Allow Parole Board to Spend More Time on the Hardest Cases Involving Violent and Sex Offenders

- Although it was not included in their report, the Sunset Commission determined that the Board of Pardons and Paroles is only able to spend one minute and twenty seconds reviewing each parole and DMS file. This bill would allow them to spend more time reviewing the files of violent, sex, and property offenders, promoting better decisionmaking.
