

Matt Waller and his family have been a part of the fostering community in the Permian Basin since 2015. After spending nine years in Camping Ministry, it was a teaching position at Midland Classics Academy that drew him and his family to West Texas. Matt and Jen had been foster parents the four years prior to moving but it was not until they moved to Midland that they found their stride in serving the foster community. Their activity and activism lead to them founding The Attic Foster Network, a nonprofit that is devoted to empowering the church and her people to engage in the prevention, intervention, and emancipation of the local orphan. Their efforts have engaged the community through the Permian Basin's body of believers to create a supportive and more engaged culture for foster parents and families to thrive in.
