

Seth currently serves as the Director of Legislative and Strategic Partnerships for the San Antonio Independent School District (SAISD) where he works with state and federal legislators, education advocates, partners, and foundations to determine how the district can change students lives for the better. Additionally, he advises the Superintendent, Board, and Executive Leadership team on best approaches to creating and implementing policies and procedures that create the conditions for student success.

Before moving to Texas, he was the Policy Director at Nevada Succeeds, a organization that he helped start dedicated to improving Nevada's schools through increasing the involvement of the business community. In this role, he played a significant role in helping the state pass 25 key education reforms in the 2015 legislative session. Originally from Cincinnati, Ohio, he received his BA from Tufts University in International Relations and Political Science and is currently finishing an MBA at the McCombs School of Business at the University of Texas at Austin.
