

KEYNOTE SPEAKER

WILL CAIN

Will Cain joined FOX News Channel (FNC) in 2020 and currently serves as host of The Will Cain Show (Weekdays, 4-5 PM/ET). He is also the host of the Will Cain Country podcast (weekdays, 12 PM/ET) on FOX News Audio where he merges the worlds of news and sports, with a spotlight on listener interaction.

From 2020 to 2025, Cain served as the co-host of FOX & Friends Weekend, FNC's top-rated weekend morning show. In this capacity, he presented interviews with key newsmakers and figures including President Donald Trump, Dwayne "The Rock" Johnson and Barstool founder Dave Portnoy.

Prior to joining FNC, Cain was as an on-air personality at ESPN where he hosted his own daily radio show and appeared as a frequent panelist on the network's morning debate program, First Take. He joined the sports network in 2015 as a contributor where he hosted Fantasy Football Now, an award winning, four-hour fantasy football program and frequently reported investigative pieces for Outside the Lines. Previously, he served as a political analyst for CNN, co-hosting In the Arena with Eliot Spitzer prior to joining Starting Point with Soledad O'Brien in 2012. Additionally, he was a host on The Blaze, where he helmed a number of programs including, Real News, Cain and Cupp, and The Cain Conversation, in which he presented a series of in-depth interviews with influential leaders in business. Throughout his tenure in news media, Cain also ventured into the field of producing and released a mini-series entitled Alise vs. The Mayor in 2014, focused on New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio's attempts to curb charter schools.

Before his career in television, Cain financed, bought and sold two media companies, Quince Media, a Hispanic media company, and Cain Communications, a community newspaper group in Texas. In 2007, his work with Quince Media earned him recognition as one of the "40 Most Influential People in the Magazine Industry" by Folio, while his acquisition and expansion of Cain Communications placed him among the Texas Press Association's "20 Under 40."

A licensed attorney in Texas, Cain attended law school at the University of Texas and received his undergraduate degree from Pepperdine University.
